“ *My memories of her are cherished
My time with her more precious
Her love and encouragement will stay with me
She encouraged me to happy and just be*

“ When my daughter, Paige(Grandma's great grandbaby), turned 3, Grandma Capps attended her birthday party. It was a reunion of sorts. She was meeting my children and husband for the first time and seeing me for the first time after many, many years. That in and of itself was wonderful, but what happened later shot this memory of Grandma Capps to the top of my charts. I was in the corner of a large banquet room, video taping the events. Through the lens, I observed Grandma Capps approach my husband, Josh, who was sitting, from behind and embraced him in a headlock/hug. She was talking to him, hugging him, grabbing his shoulders and just holding on, full of smiles. He sat listening and nodding with a slightly awkward smile on his face. I couldn't hear what they were saying but it looked like such a loving conversation. When he and I spoke later he let me know that she thought HE was her grandchild and she was telling him how much she loves him and missed him and how proud she is of him. Really, the nicest things. We had a laugh about it. We knew the state of mind Grandma Capps had because of her illness and were understanding. The laugh was born out of love. I know those words were for me. What I observed that day, was a woman ready to give love. To share love. Expressing love. I loved this moment so much and am so deeply grateful for this BEAUTIFUL memory I get to keep. Rest in Peace, Grandma.
