“ Dan and I were co workers at Apple. We talked about all kinds of things but we both loved food and shared restaurant picks quite often. Dan loved Polish food and I was sure to share with him my finds even if it was only a pierogi stand. I was always a bit amazed at this Irishman's love of Polish food!. The memory that sticks out for me was when he introduced me to his wife, Fran. We had probably worked together for a few years by this time but i was passing by as they were sitting at a table outside. Dan summoned me. "I want you to meet my wife." Such pride in his voice, as if he were revealing some cherished precious stone. He so loved his Fancy. Dan's shoe fetish should have been examined by a medical professional! He was always so excited to show off his new pairs. And those demos were quite frequent. Sports, sports, sports. i now realize he lied when I asked him if he remembered the first Super Bowl, which I did. He was probably just trying to make me feel comfortable around my much younger coworkers. He was great at making people comfortable. He influenced me and had an impact on my pocketbook in just the last month. After seeing his Facebook posts of his new Dyson lamp and gaming chair for working at home, I decided I needed both items, though not THOSE brands. Those of us who were touched by him will undoubtedly have been influenced by his joy of life and living. Well done, Dan,
