“ Mom was a “traditional” homemaker and this included making dad and us kids our breakfasts before work and school -and yes-that often meant a full feast of bacon, eggs, toast, juice and coffee. In the Polish tradition I think I started drinking coffee as soon as I was school-age! With 5 children whose school schedules were slightly different you can only imagine how busy and frenetic the mornings would be! As one of the younger children though I left for school later than my older siblings and one of my most precious childhood memories is that everyday, Mom made time just for me at the breakfast table -it may have only been a few minutes but she would give me her absolute undivided attention so that I could talk with her about anything on my mind. She would not pass judgment but would listen and advise when I asked. When I grew into adulthood and moved away, whenever I phoned her it took me right back to those days in the kitchen and I always knew that she had stopped whatever she was doing to give me her loving attention. When I was blessed with my own children, Mom served as my role model and if I have been half as good a mom as she was to us that is pretty darn great. I will keep talking with her in heaven above and the one thing I know for certain is that when I call on her she will be listening carefully. Love you forever, love you for always, as long as I'm living (and beyond) my Mommy you will be.

“ Mom loved to dance and sing along to her favorite Englebert Humperdinck songs. Even when moving became harder as she aged, she would swing and sway to music in her chair, her arms keeping a rhythmic beat, when a melody moved her.

“ RIP my beautiful neighbour Helen.....always kind with never a bad word. She was a 2nd mother to my wife Joanie, today they are joined again to watch over us below. I'm sure when she enters her eternal life she will have tears in her eyes as she did when ever someone would visit.

Helen always cried at every visit, "Helen if you cry I'm leaving", I would tell her, and begin to cross the street. Never completing the exit.

Miss those times visiting one of the kindest, loving people that walked on earth.
