“ I know it's just a little thing; I did not know Marlene, all that well, but she very often sat in the second row at church behind the pew, where the lector and the lector's family would sit. At the time, my daughter had a young family and it was hard for her to get them out the door to be on time; they would get there just before Mass started. I would often ask Marlene if she would save seats for them, and she always agreed cheerfully, even in the beginning, when I didn't even know her name.
