“ Other than my own father, Sam was one of the most authentic people I have ever known. When you were with Sam you got pure unfiltered "Sam" which is why everybody loved the guy. I knew Sam as far back when he was briefly a chauffeur... a skill that would later come in handy right up until Art got engaged. ha ha
Sam was a very frugal person. Although I did see him once buy a $100.00 shot of Louis XIII cognac for Sal up at Brownies.
Other than that you'd think the guy grew up during the depression, making his own sausage and he was always the last one to ante up in a poker game... one time we rushed back to his car, he was worried about the parking meter. So we get in the car and he's just sitting there and I says "come on let's go what are you doing?" and he says .."well there's still 10 minutes left on the meter" .... marone!
Sam was a fairly religious person and loved confession because he figured you get to start over fresh each week but he didn't wanna take any chances on a long penance so it'd be like "Father forgive me for I have sinned .. I think you know my attorney Mr. Goldman"

That's Sam..What a great guy!

“ So many great memories. Vegas trip. White water rafting trip. Playing in a band. Seeing friends bands play. The one constant in all these experiences was the laughter, always making each other laugh about everything and nothing in particular. Sam enjoyed giving our mutual friends a "hard time" in a manner that let everyone know that the purpose of their grilling was to elicit peals of laughter from all involved. RIP my brother.
