“I never thought of my mom as being particularly brave, but now that I think back on her life, I find that she had her own style of bravery. She met Dad when he was stationed in Belgium during World War II. They fell in love, married and then Mom left her family to come to America to start a new life with him. She did not know our language, our customs or anyone else besides Dad. They had their struggles like we all do and stayed together for 68 years. Some would consider that a courageous deed! Mom always supported us kids in whatever we pursued and was always happy for our accomplishments. I will miss her encouraging words whenever I had good news to share with her, and I know that my brother Dan and sister Deb feel the same way.”
