“Mr.” Terry ❤️

I met you in 2004 when Troy and I started “dating” but I didn’t get to know you much until after senior graduation and our first trip to Marco island. I still remember calling my mom and telling her how spoiled I was. “I walked by and smelled a perfume at tommy bahama and he just picked it up and bought it for me!” You loved spoiling everyone you loved. My favorite photo of you is the one I shared here of just you in Florida on the patio - in your bathing suit, listening and watching sports, Lipton ice tea near by, and your cigarette. The perfect description of you in your happy place. The last few years certainly had ups and downs in our relationships but you never failed to miss a birthday text and an “I love you.” To be honest the last few rough years are a blur - all I tend to lean on are the loving and fun memories and I know that’s what you want. Thank you for the countless “Ashley baby” hugs and shoulder rubs. Thank you for your contagious laugh. And thank you for raising the man of my dreams. Troy is truly the best husband and father there is and I know you are so proud of him for that. I know your smartass jokes are still here and please don’t ever leave. I was crying in the backyard the other day with all your flowers around me and out of nowhere the sun started shining - I know that was you ❤️ Give grandma and grandpa a giant hug from all of us. We miss you and love you so so much ❤️❤️❤️❤️

I'm sorry I lost track of Terry. He was a great friend and stood up in my first marriage. Great memories of this man.

“ I met Terry the first day of Kindergarten and began a rare journey that sadly ended after almost 60 years. We never went through a phase when we did not talk. He was my best pal all of those years, A book is what I need to tell all of the stories we experienced. This man was loyal and had a laugh I loved. When he faced adversity he dealt with it like a master. I got some of my best advice from during the years. He had a way of dealing with negativity that was rare and unique to me. Just move on and focus was his way. As kids playing basketball in elementary he was a star and fun. He said what he felt. It was long before I learned to be a hair stylist he would ask me to cut his before a game in our basement. When I considered it as a career he was with me all the way while others laughed. He was indeed my longest most supportive client for all of these years. He loved coming to hang out and visit. We loved to dress up and go to bars as young guys always him being a favorite with the ladies. I will always admire him as a family man too. He loved Jamie and the boys so much. So generous it was beyond the norm. I pray he is doing what he deserves and waiting for all that he touched so deeply. I love you buddy. Your pal, Edwin
